2. Challenges of international dissemination of Inner Mongolia Nadam culture

Inner Mongolia Nadam culture, as the treasure of Mongolian culture, carries rich historical heritage and national emotions. In August 2010, the Ordos International Nadam Conference was held, which made Mongolian Nadam become an international "sports event", and gained the "right of speech" of the national sports and culture. The international sports began to know Mongolian Nadam, and the Nadam sports and culture "shook hands" with the world for the first time. [3] However, in the process of its international dissemination, it faces many challenges. These challenges not only come from the level of cultural awareness and understanding, but also involve the choice and use of communication channels, as well as cultural output and international discourse.

2.1. Cultural awareness and understanding

Inner Mongolia Nadam culture has a low level of international recognition, which is closely related to its history, tradition and cultural characteristics that are different from the current situation of Western culture. Many countries and regions have cognitive biases and deficiencies, or even misunderstandings and prejudices about Mongolian culture. For example, in some countries, people may be more inclined to categorize Mongolian culture simply as nomadic culture or culture related to grassland life, while ignoring the rich diversity and deep historical deposits of Inner Mongolia Nadam culture. This difference in cultural cognition has brought difficulties to the international dissemination of Inner Mongolia Nadam culture, and it is necessary to strengthen the publicity of its characteristics and connotations through a variety of ways, so as to promote the international community's comprehensive understanding and recognition of it.
2.2. Selection and application of communication channels

Facing the challenges of the information age, the international dissemination of Inner Mongolia Nadam culture needs to adapt to the ever-changing dissemination environment, choose appropriate dissemination channels and flexibly use various means of dissemination. However, due to cultural differences and language barriers, it is often difficult to find suitable communication channels and audience groups for Inner Mongolia Nadam culture in international communication. For example, although emerging social media and webcasting platforms provide new opportunities for cultural dissemination, how to attract more target audiences internationally has become a challenge yet to be solved. In addition, the cultural communication habits and preferences of different countries and regions need to be fully considered in order to develop more targeted communication strategies to enhance the international influence of Inner Mongolia Nadam culture.

2.3. Cultural exports and international discourse

In the context of globalization, the export of national cultures and international discourse have become more and more important. However, the status of Inner Mongolia Nadam culture in the international discourse system is relatively low, and its international dissemination is constrained by the Western-dominated international cultural pattern. For example, some countries and regions are more receptive to the influence of Western culture and have reservations about the spread of non-Western culture. This has led to the relatively weak influence of Inner Mongolia’s Nadam culture in international cultural exchanges and limited international discourse. In order to overcome this challenge, Inner Mongolia needs to strengthen its cultural self-confidence, actively advocate multicultural exchange and dialogue, and enhance its status and influence in the international cultural discourse system.

To sum up, the challenges facing the international dissemination of Nadam culture in Inner Mongolia involve many aspects, which need to be solved through policy support, international exchanges and cooperation and other ways. Only by fully understanding and coping with these challenges can we better promote Inner Mongolia Nadam culture to the world and achieve the long-term goal of its international communication.
